President’s Message

Usually, the Bulletin contains a calendar of our upcoming events and activities where members can come together and share a love of books, an interest in a lecture topic, or meet up at the park with small children. All of a sudden, we’ve had to postpone or cancel events, like the Shakespeare at Caltech lunch, Playreaders and the CHATS campus tours. Some groups like the Caltech Women’s Investment Club are still able to meet virtually and we just held our first virtual Wine & Cheese Social. We will also hold our April 8th Board Meeting via teleconference.

For this Bulletin, we cannot include a calendar since it is hard to know when any of our events will restart. We’ll send an electronic update once events have been rescheduled.

It is really strange to think that in November we hosted a lecture by Sarah Yeomans on the epidemics of the Roman Empire, and now we are suddenly faced with the COVID-19 pandemic. This is upending lives, families and work schedules. On a personal note, my youngest daughter had high school suspended with an impromptu three-week Spring Break, and my two oldest daughters scrambled to move out of campus housing at the end of their Spring Breaks. Like Caltech students, they too will be finishing up the semester with online courses. I also know I won’t be seeing many family members for a while, as my brother is currently under lock down in Paris, my middle sister north of the border in Victoria, B.C. and my oldest sister in the countryside north of London, near my father.

Amidst all these changes and stresses, I still revert back to the club mission of promoting friendship and sharing of mutual interests. So how do you maintain friendships when “social distancing” is now critical during this public health crisis? Luckily, we still have email, social media, and that old-fashioned device, the telephone to check in with family, friends and neighbors. Now more than ever it is important to reach out (over the telephone or electronically) to check in on families at home with small children, friends near and far, as well as older relatives and club members at home or in senior living. We’ve started a private Facebook Group for the Caltech Women’s Club. Join us online to come together and share photographs, information on how you’re occupying your time and tips on how to cope.

I’m now using a new sign off. Stay healthy!

If you are interested starting a new CWC activity virtually or just want to connect with friends, below are some helpful online resources you may want to consider:

Facebook Live

You can schedule a live broadcast up to one week in advance, and people can join your lobby three minutes before your broadcast begins. Once you’ve scheduled a live video, you will be able to share a link to the broadcast. Here’s the link: https://www.facebook.com/help/1636872026560015

Google Hangouts

A communications app, designed by Google, lets you connect with one or more of your friends for text and video chat. You can chat with up to 150 people on a variety of devices or hold a video call with up to 25 participants. https://support.google.com/hangouts/answer/3115553?co=GENIE.Platform%3DDesktop&hl=en

Skype

You can host up to 50 people online at one time with SKYPE. https://www.skype.com/en/free-conference-call/

Zoom

Zoom offers a full-featured Basic Plan for free with unlimited meetings. Try Zoom for as long as you like - there is no trial period. Your Basic plan has a 40 minutes time limit on meetings with three or more (up to 100) total participants. https://zoom.us

Let us know the activity you are starting, send us feedback, and most importantly, enjoy the camaraderie of other CWC members.
My house has been staged to sell. Due to coronavirus, we have put the sale on hold, but the staging is all here. Therefore, we are living in a strange looking house...

How Are People Exercising?

The kids and I have become obsessed with the iNaturalist app. Whenever it is sunny we go outside and take pictures of bugs or plants to identify on iNaturalist. Real scientists and other community members look at the pictures to confirm the identifications. It’s a citizen science project to help discover the world’s biodiversity. I think it’s especially fun to find slugs or mushrooms. Those seem to be some items the project is especially interested in identifying. It’s hard for me to get the kids to sit down and do science, but when they find stuff outside, they start asking questions, and are then happy to go discover the answers together.

What Are You Doing These Days?

Join us over on the private CWC Facebook Group to let us know and connect.
On February 6th, the Urban Explorers visited the 21-room Wrigley Mansion, also known as Tournament House. The Italian Renaissance style estate was originally built by George Stimson with his son G. Lawrence Stimson as the architect. While construction started in 1906, completion was delayed until 1914, since the San Francisco earthquake led to a shortage of materials and workers. William Wrigley, Jr, then purchased the house in 1914. It became one of six Wrigley family homes, including residences in Philadelphia, Chicago, Catalina, Phoenix and Lake Geneva, Wisconsin.

Three features that occur throughout the house are marble fireplaces, detailed ceilings and the use of rare woods. The living room featured a tiger eye oak floor, sliced on the bias, along with a cove ceiling and doors made of Circassian walnut. A former solarium on the first floor features a foil wallpaper background, there to remind the family of the foil gum wrappers at the origin of the family fortune. The four-story house has 18,500 square feet and 2,000 square feet of closets. The front hall features an Aeolian pipe organ which plays musical rolls with sound emerging from 1500 pipes located in the basement.

The Wrigley family donated the house to the City of Pasadena in 1958 for use as the headquarters of the Tournament of Roses, which the family enjoyed watching from the front porch. The upstairs features rooms focused on different aspects of the Rose Parade, including displays of helmets and football memorabilia in the Rose Bowl Game room. The first Rose Bowl game was played at Tournament Park in 1902. Due to a lopsided score with Michigan beating Stanford 49-0, in 1903 the New Year’s festivities left out football (which did not return until 1916) and included chariot racing. Eventually a stadium designed by Myron Hunt was constructed in the Arroyo Seco in 1922, and shortly after named the Rose Bowl. There’s a display of past crowns worn by the Rose Queens and tiaras worn by her Court. In 1913 and 1914, both a Rose Queen and King were selected, but from 1915 on only Rose Queens and Princesses have been selected. Another room features photographs of the Grand Marshals, everyone from Kermit the Frog to Shirley Temple Black (the only person to be Grand Marshal three times).

If you want to visit on your own after social distancing times have passed, free tours are usually offered February through August on Thursdays at 2:00 p.m. and 3:00 p.m. Reservations are only needed for large groups. 391 S. Orange Grove Boulevard.
A Message from the Staff & Faculty Consultation Center

March 20, 2020

An open letter to our Caltech community:

Today, we in the Staff and Faculty Consultation Center are launching a new space on our site, called TheWell@Caltech. This will continue to be a place to go for a steady channel of mental health support, including coping strategies, tools and techniques, resources of many types, and a place to connect.

The vision behind this idea was to create an “oasis” of sorts, in the face of a barrage of distressing news, disruptions to our daily routines, and the loss of a sense of control in response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Starting today, you will find some essential tip sheets for better sleep, self-care, normal reactions in a time of crisis, and managing your intake of distressing media content.

In the coming days, we will be adding to this content with more links to physical health resources, mindfulness, targeted tools for managers, and information for special populations, including parents of young children, those with eldercare concerns, and partners who may be in isolation with someone who causes them to feel unsafe.

As of today, many of us join others throughout California in “staying at home.” We feel the discomfort of having our daily life patterns significantly altered. Others continue to come to work and face fears and concerns associated with that experience. Below, please find suggestions on how best to weather these challenges.

One of Caltech’s great strengths is that we are a community that enjoys many close ties and associations. If you are reading this, chances are good that you know me, or another member of our SFCC team. One of the biggest stressors in this time is a loss of this sense of connection. TheWell@Caltech will have items of interest to our particular community, and be shaped by input from you, too. It will be a place to restore and re-engage with one another.

We are here for you and will continue to be.

Sincerely,

Linda Krippner, Psy.D.

Staff & Faculty Consultation Center

The Caltech Staff and Faculty Consultation Center (SFCC) is a campus resource that is available to active faculty, staff, postdocs and their families or domestic partners at no cost to the user. Retirees and those covered by COBRA plans may also be eligible.

The SFCC provides professional, confidential, brief consultations and is staffed by skilled mental health professionals with extensive experience in assisting employees and their families to balance the complex demands of work and personal life. They provide consultations to individuals, couples, and families and address a variety of concerns, including depression, anxiety, substance abuse, parenting, elder care, work-related stress, and communication challenges with supervisors, employees, or coworkers.

The Caltech Staff and Faculty Consultation Center (SFCC) is working to quickly adapt services during the COVID-19 response. They are currently providing phone consultations and are working to offer video consultations soon.

A REFLECTION ON FORESTS AND FRIENDSHIP IN THESE TIMES OF DISTANCE

By Brooke Anderson

“You know me, I think there ought to be a big old tree right there. And let’s give him a friend. Everybody needs a friend.”

Bob Ross

I was recently doing some reading about forests, the process of carbon sequestration, and how trees hold the key to their own restoration in their limbs. As we come into the season of spring and during these days when we are inside more than we expected to be, it occurred to me that perhaps reflecting on trees could provide some insight for us.

No matter where we live or have lived, we are likely to have stories of trees. They are the beautiful guards that hold on to our land for us when we travel the world in search of ourselves, and their stories become a part of ours. Perhaps your stories include the lone tree on a river bank where you spent summer afternoons against its rough bark as you contemplated your life, or maybe your memories are filled with the stand of trees you and your friends ran through whooping with joy at the end of school days. Maybe it is a tree that towered over your grandmother’s backyard, or perhaps it is the one your own yard covered in ripe lemons that bow the branches toward the ground. Maybe it is the tree that graced you with shade while your little ones played in the grass last summer or so many years ago or maybe it is row of trees loaded with purple blooms that welcomes you home.

But trees are far more than just the keepers of our stories. They are the lifeblood of our land and the air we breathe. Trees shade us, hold space for the critters that delight us, have roots that push into the dirt covered by the fungi that thrive on their surfaces. Their leaves convert chlorophyll, their trunks siphon water, and their bodies hold on to the air we breathe out. Trees sustain us, even when we do not remember that they do.

Despite our idyllic treatment of nature in poems and essays though, the climate can change and bring with it disruption and discontent. The magic in the forest, however, is that despite the assault that climate changes bring, the forest itself holds ones of the keys to restoration. As carbon grows unchecked in our environment changing the face of our ecosystems, trees are perfectly suited to restore some balance in our world. They take in carbon from the air around them, trapping it in their tissues and storing it until they are destroyed or they disintegrate back into the soil around them. That is why healthy forests full of trees and plants are sometimes referred to as carbon sinks. While the trunks of trees store up to 40% of the carbon in a tree, the amazing root system that reaches out through the soil below our feet captures up to 60% of the carbon that a tree can hold. Much like the concept of the iceberg and its tip, the part of the tree that we can see is only the beginning. While one tree alone holds carbon, we begin to see when they are gathered together, that the collective nature of trees holds power for greater change, and the very nature of trees is thing that restores the land.

Perhaps we are not that different. Perhaps in the midst of our relationships, we hold the secret to our own restoration even in the midst of disruption and discontent. Even in the moments when we are apart—we can find ways to connect, and like the trees, the heritage of our community and our personal relationships are rooted in space and time that goes far beyond what we can see. Of course we are not sequestering carbon to assist a beleaguered climate, but we are capable of holding space and providing care for our friends in challenging times. Just like trees, we hold each other’s stories, and our friends become the lifeblood of our experiences, contributing to our personal and collective restoration. Especially in these bewildering days, when we are scattered and perhaps feeling more alone, we can collectively attempt to hold on to the joy that friendship and connection can be for each of us. Because like Bob Ross said, “everybody needs a friend,” and that’s exactly the vision of the CWC—a coming together of individuals to create a community for friendship and to enrich the world of those we gather with, even if the gathering is on the phone, online, or in our emails and notes.

We’re just switching gears to our “virtual exchange” in our Casita Exchange Facebook Group during the COVID-19 “safer-at-home” period. Please join us @ fb.me/CWCCasitaExchange. We’re looking into virtual story hours, parenting tips, Zoom meet-ups, recipe swaps and more. As they say, time flies when you’re having fun, so we’ll be exchanging fun!! We’ll share what we’ve been up to in the next bulletin.

Here’s a few snapshots of our winter fun; sheds, swaps, shares, & smiles 😊

We put up new sheds to keep our exchange items clean and secure.

Families came by for a clothes swap and chat.

Caltech History and Architectural Tour Service

Chatting with Chats

We love the friendship and camaraderie of being a CHAT and sharing our passion for Caltech’s history and architecture. This winter we channeled our energy towards docent training materials and campus tours. Congrats to the education committee for coming up with a new docent onboarding framework and mentor system! We were lucky enough to meet after the February campus tour at the Red Door to share a few laughs as we made plans for the Spring.

A few weeks later, we found ourselves coming to terms with COVID-19’s impact on campus and our “safer-at-home” situation. Following policy, our Community Tours were cancelled but that didn’t stop our community spirit. We met with Facilities via Zoom on March 22nd and got an update on the situation. We were impressed by the Campus response to move to online training while supporting essential research. It was so great to hear each other’s voices and see each other via video. So now we’re going to continue meeting via Zoom to create a self-guided tour application and continue working on our docent training materials. Let us know if you’re interested in joining us! Contact any of us or email chats@cwccaltech.org.
